

Here's a Time-Lapse Video of the Building Museum's "Beach"

By Benjamin Freed | July 10, 2015

It didn't take long for a preview of the National Building Museum's new "Beach" exhibit to become one of Washingtonian's most instantly successful posts, presumably because everyone is excited by the prospect of bouncing around a giant ball pit for adults. But in case you haven't had your fill of "The Beach," the museum has released a time-lapse video of the exhibit's construction, filling with 1 million polyethylene balls, and opening day.

